

CALL FOR ARTICLES

Medical and health sciences are among the fastest-growing scientific disciplines. The length and quality of human life depend on their continuous progress. The need to update medical knowledge and skills is crucial for the professional development of physicians, but also nurses, midwives, paramedics, and pharmacists, who, by improving their scientific and professional skills, raise not only their own qualifications but also the standing of their profession. Equally important is the exchange of knowledge, experiences, and views by specialists from various countries and fields, open to academic discussion and scientific polemics.

I am pleased to invite all authors from Poland and abroad to submit articles to the third issue of the peer-reviewed annual "Central European Nursing Review," published by the Faculty of Health Sciences of the Józef Gołuchowski University of Applied Sciences.

In particular, we encourage you to address the following topics:

- History of medicine, including the history of nursing;
- Improving the competencies and professional role of nurses – past, present, and future;
- The nursing profession and its place in the healthcare system – in Poland, Europe, and worldwide;
- Nursing staff and the work environment;
- Nursing standards in clinical practice;
- Ethical dilemmas of nurses and midwives;
- Current problems in modern medicine;
- Emergency medical services in the healthcare system;
- The role and importance of pharmacology in medical science;
- Contemporary problems in gynecology and obstetrics;
- Clinical physiotherapy and rehabilitation;
- Public health in Poland and global health policy.

Articles written in accordance with the editorial guidelines will be accepted until December 15, 2025. After successful peer review, the journal will publish issue 3/2025, which will be published by the end of the first quarter of 2026. All information for authors is available at <https://nursingreview.eu/>
